Patience, Love and Care

When you can't see his goodness, his mercy is always there.

is one of patience, love and care.

Speaking from the Heart

Angela Washington

Childhood

I grew up in rural Fairfield, Fl. with my fraternal grandparents, attending church 1st, 3rd and 5th Sunday. January 3, 1975, the Glover family met me at the Greyhound bus station in Ocala to pick me up for my grandmother. I had to go with them to a revival that night before they would take me home. It was something about the message, the spirit or the moment that pulled me to join Liberty Temple. This church was 30 miles from my home and my family had no car. Isn't it just like God to make the impossible possible. Under Bishop P. J. Williams, I was ordained as a missionary at the age of 12. I was blessed to speak at different churches, sing on the radio, lead the Youth Program and play drums. I left the church at 13.5 but God never left me. His anointing was all over me and everyone could see it but me.

Leaving the country to live in Jacksonville should have been a dream come true instead it was lesson behind lesson on how difficult life could be. My mom shooting herself, jumping off the balcony, going to jail for manslaughter and getting on crack was enough to make the average person give up BUT GOD!!!

Every season of our lives is a learning season. For decades I learned what it felt like to know sadness as a personal friend, to have a mother that was more like my child and to stumble through life smiling when inside I cried daily. No one knew the real Angela Washington, not even myself. Today, I am amazed at how so much of my life was filled with tears but the tears didn't drown me. The tears only washed away the ugliness of humanity and cleansed me to be the Child of God I was meant to be. Thank God for the tears.

My pain has divine purpose. Every subject I address I know from experience. No longer do I have the tears to prove that I cried but I have the testimony and the passion in my voice. I struggled to get out of the hood and I did. I struggled to get my education.

Now, I have two bachelor degrees, passed the PHR and Principles of Safety certification exams. You can do much more than anyone expects. You control your destiny. You set the tone for your own race. The race you will Win!!!

My Growing Season

My turning point came when I had pre-cancerous polyps removed and I was fighting with hypoglycemia. Since a number of women in my family had died from cancer and they also had issues with their glucose levels I got scared. I said to myself if I'm going to die at least I want to get a promotion. I took a position in Tennessee. I was running once again but I ran right into where God wanted me to be. I was blessed with a peace of mind. I was finally free to live, to learn who I really was and openly admit that I was a flawed and broken soul. My brokenness is in my words. My tears are in each syllable. I am exposed letter by letter. No longer can I hide behind my smile. Now, I can stand in front of anyone and say I am stronger than my saddest moment. I will fall but I won't stay down.

When I speak, I am a mother, a human resource representative, a manager and coach. My love for football, basketball and tennis has taught me about team work and discipline. Those same principles are used in a family and on the job. We can be good alone but we can be great when we allow others to help us.

Come join me and let's be great together!

Let's Stay in Touch

I am a product of loneliness and brokenness, a victim many times and a victor every time. The things that I write are born from my pain. Many times when I share parts of my story tears roll down my face and my voice cracks. It is in those moments the pain of yesterday is real within my spirit. It is in those moments I share the undying love God has shown me over and over again.
